Gastric Cancer and Pre-Neoplastic Lesions of the Stomach
Thursday, September 8, 2016
6:00 pm – 9:00 pm

Icahn Medical Institute
Goldwurm Auditorium, 1st Floor
1425 Madison Avenue (at East 98th Street)
New York, NY 10029

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION
The management of pre-neoplastic lesions of the stomach (i.e. atrophic gastritis, intestinal metaplasia, and varying degrees of dysplasia) can be challenging for the gastroenterologist in the absence of clear guidelines. However, management of these lesions in the appropriate population may prevent cancer, or at least detect it early. If detected early, high-risk lesions and early gastric cancer can be treated endoscopically with excellent results and prognosis, compared to limited options and dismal prognosis when it presents at an advanced stage.

This program will review diagnosis and management of pre-neoplastic lesions of the stomach as well as discuss newer endoscopic diagnostic and therapeutic modalities for these lesions and early gastric cancer. The program will end with a discussion on whether screening high-risk populations is appropriate.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES
• Describe risk factors for gastric cancer and identify high-risk populations
• Discuss and describe the management of pre-neoplastic lesions of the stomach (atrophic gastritis, intestinal metaplasia, dysplasia)
• Discuss and describe current and new diagnostic modalities for pre-neoplastic gastric lesions and/or early gastric cancer
• Discuss and describe endoscopic therapies for high-risk gastric lesions and early gastric cancer
• Discuss and describe appropriate screening modalities for gastric cancer and identify high-risk patients who may benefit

INTENDED AUDIENCE
Gastroenterologists, GI fellows, and primary care physicians
